Why Learn About Me?

Self-assessment is a way to learn more about yourself: what you like, what you don't like, and how you tend to react to certain situations.

Learning about yourself is the first step in finding a good career fit.

Assessments are tools to help you explore your skills, interests, values, skills, and other traits.

These traits are then matched to a broad list of careers.

Choosing a career is a complex, multi-step process. It requires learning about yourself and the occupations you are considering so that you can make an informed decision.

Assessing your interests, work preferences, and abilities and recognizing your strengths help you to find a suitable career direction - one that could lead to your "dream job."

Your personality type is a key to career choice because it affects your satisfaction with the job, your productivity, and the likelihood that you will persist in this type of work.

People who are working in jobs that satisfy their interests tend to be happier, more productive, and stay on the job longer.
